People don't talk too much about miracles anymore. When I was growing up, my religious education was replete with miraculous tales, ones that filled my young head with the delicious wonder of mystery and the fantastic. No matter the avowed scientific pragmatism of my later years—nothing can steal from me the memories so precious of an awe that goes beyond understanding.

And yet . . . like I said, it's 1986 and this ever-analytical world we live in is uncomfortable with mysteries and sheepish about its legends. We don't have time anymore for stories about loaves of bread and fish. We're too sophisticated for miracles.

Aren't we?

Well, not quite. This issue of JONNY QUEST, for example, was touched by the miraculous. About half-way through inking these pages, Dan Adkins was taken seriously ill. In fact, Dan went from his drawing board into the hospital—and, considering how scary it was at the time, it's at least a little bit of a miracle that he's back in tip-top shape today.

Of course, Dan's ailment left ve editor with ten uninked pages, an ever-encroaching deadline, and the possibility of growing old before my time! Luckily, a few miracle-workers stepped in to lend hand and brush, thereby saving this issue from the Dreaded Deadline Doom, My admiration and thanks to: Bret Blevins (p. 13), Sam Kieth (pp. 6 and 18), Steve Leialoha (p. 20), Steve Rude (p.5), Dave Stevens

(pp. 8 and 25), Al Williamson (p. 14), and Tom Yeates (who inked his own pencils on pages 16 and 22). To top things off, Ken Feduniewicz completed a miraculous coloring job in all of about two weeks. If I didn't know better, I'd say this issue had been blessed!

Finally, one more person who deserves special credit is Richard Silvov, who assists Tom Yeates on several of his artistic projects, including this one. When I first met Richard, some years ago, he was busily drawing fish at the time. And though this wasn't a Bible story that Tom and he were working on, it was a mystical tale about an Indian shaman/time traveler performed . . . well. who miracles.

Funny how things happen, eh?

CREATOR PROFILES -

TOM YEATES

Tom Yeates is yet another of the many unique stylists to emerge from the Joe Kubert School, and he's best known for his tenure on SWAMP THING (before turning the title over to pals Bissette and Totleben) and Comics' TIME-Epic SPIRITS. After having his work published in various fanzines during the 1970s, he soon made his way into the pro ranks, ghosting under Al Williamson on the STAR WARS newspaper strip, illustrating Ted White's novel, Phoenix Prime, and doing numerous back-up stories and covers for DC, Eclipse, Pacific, and HEAVY METAL.

Currently, Tom is working on various projects for Eclipse, and was the editor of Eclipse's four-part WORLD OF WOOD series.

DAN ADKINS

Dan Adkins broke into the industry at age 28 as Wally Wood's assistant, spending sixteen months working on such titles as THUNDER AGENTS. TOTAL WAR. and FANTASTIC VOYAGE. Since then, he has inked nearly everyone in the business including Jack Kirby, Bill Everett, Neal Adams, John Buscema, Gil Kane, Jim Steranko, P. Craig Russell, and the late Don Newton, embellishing CAPT. *AMERICA, TALES TO AS-TONISH, GREEN LAN-TERN, SILVER SURFER, BATMAN, and many others. He also illustrated eleven Strange stories STRANGE TALES, drew

THE LAST CURTAIN...

This is the last issue wherein we present letters from those comics cognoscenti who were fortunate enough to receive advance black-and-white copies of JONNY QUEST #1 and copious enough to respond. As I write, the first issue of JQ has just hit the stands and, already, the office phone lines have been ringing off the hook with kudos from all across the country. Yow! Are we blushing yet?!

Anyway, next issue we'll finally be featuring your comments on the finished, full color version of JQ #1, so stay tuned. And in the meantime...

Diana

I feit privileged and thrilled to receive an advance copy of JONNY QUEST #1 As a child of the '60s, I was looking forward to purchasing this book as soon as it appeared. On the surface, you've saved me the trip to the comic shop, but I enjoyed this one enough to still include it on my list of future purchases when it appears, because I thoroughly enjoyed it and would like a color copy in my collection

Before reading the comic, I sat down and reran videos of some JQ tapes I've been lucky enough to procure. I'm delighted to say that Comico's JONNY QUEST #1 is very much in the spirit of the TV program. There's all the sense of adventure, discovery, danger, mystery, camaraderie, and fantasy that made the cartoon show so appealing as I was growing up. Better still, I feel strongly that the book will appeal to readers too young to have ever seen a single Quest cartoon. All of the values of good storytelling are inherent in the book, which races along at a fantastic clip while introducing us to the book's cast of characters

Of course, it's a thrill to see Doug Wildey illustrate the first part of the story. This is the closest thing one can get to owning a Quest cartoon, short of securing the rare videos that collectors like myself horde. And that's not meant to belittle the efforts of Steve Rude, one of my favorite comics artists, whose style is as suitable to this book as it is to the wonderful NEXUS

It's obvious that, for everyone involved, from Comico's editor to the writers and artists on the book, JONNY QUEST is a labor of love. That gives the book the kind of ambience that money can't buy.

I wish the comic book version of JONNY QUEST at least as long a life as the TV show had — and then some! Keep up the present standard of quality and I'll be along for the entire ride — and loving every minute of it!

Jeff Gelb Redondo Beach, CA

Dear Diana,

Thanx for the advance copy of JONNY QUEST #1. Lemme see what I can say that may be of some worth to you about your comic-to-be.

Well, I like it.

I'm not ready to say that this'll be the hottest title around this year—more than likely it'll be a cult favorite. But I do believe that you, and particularly Doug Wildey, did a good job on the first JONNY QUEST comic in—great Caesar's ghost!—22 years? I enjoyed reading it, and I was glad that it was pitched to a "Gold Key" level, which sults the book much more than if a Marvelesque approach were tried

Yes, in my salad days (and, actually, it was more like my unpicked produce days), I did enjoy watching Jonny Quest on TV, particularly in the nighttime spot where it was originally placed; having JQ there, instead of in the Saturday morning ghetto where it eventually was dumped, seemed to legitimize it more as a dramatic series. JQ was a show that Hanna-Barbera really seemed to expend a lot of effort on. And the comic seems a pretty faithful recapturing of the original JQ TV show, as much as can be done on paper Glad you left all the principals at the same age they were in 1964, but updated the menaces. Terrorists fit right into the QUEST world

I've liked Doug Wildey's work ever since I first encountered him as a replacement for Russ Manning on Gold Key's TARZAN. Between Manning and Kubert, Wildey's Ape Man is the only one that satisfies. And, being an old Gold Key alumnus, Wildey seems to know the right pitch to give to the feature.

ture. (Don't worry, I also know that he did RIO for Eclipse. I liked that one, too) Keep him on by all means. Surprisingly, I liked Steve Rude's version much less maybe it's Royer's cartoony inking, or just the poor contrast with Wildey (Don't get mad, Steve and Mike, but Wildey you aren't!)

Bitl Messner-Loebs' script for the second one wasn't bad either, though, again, I liked if a bit less than "The Sands of Khasa Tahid." I do like your Dragon Lady clone, Jade, but you'd best be careful about her name similarity to another Dragon Lady-influenced character, namely, Marv Wolfman's Cheshire. But, as a counterpoint to the Pat Ryanish Race, she works quite well. Let's see more of her, and of Dr. Zin as well.

What works so well about most of the book, and the first story in particular, is the understated characterization. Everybody from the gas pump jockey to the token professor to the principals has something you can grab hold of, tike a mid-fifties Batman story.

So, my honest response is that I like your book very much, particularly Doug Wildey's part of it. I'm not sure that this will be the stuff that will knock X-MEN off the top of the charts, but who cares? I don't even read X-MEN anymore! Please forward a copy to R. A. Jones, friend and Amazing Heroes comics reviewer. I think he'll enjoy it, even though I doubt he'll go hog-wild over it. Whatever the sales reports, I hope you keep JQ in publication for at least a year. Give the people a chance to find out about it it may not make Howard Chaykin turn green with envy, but I know I'll be buying it

Yours, Lou Mougin Graham, TX

—Thanks for the vote of confidence, Lou. You'll be seeing more of Jezebel Jade and Dr. Zin — both members of the original animated series, by the way — In the very next issue. And as you probably know by now, R. A. Jones did receive preview copies of JQ #1 and #2—and we went hog-wild over his rave review!

Coming from COMICO ... Shipping September 19th Newsstand titles on sale 10/31/86

Up until May of this year, Comico titles were sold only through the 3000-odd comic book specialty stores scattered across America-the "direct sales" market, as we in the biz like to call it. Chances are, unless you lived in or near an urban center, your only means of buying our comics was through the mail-either via subscriptions directly from Comico or through specialized subscription services, like Wisconsin's Westfield Comics. But Comico titles, unlike Marvels, DC's, or Archies, were nowhere to be found on that familiar, neighborhood newsstand-until May, that is, when Capital Distributing Company stepped in to distribute our comics on newsstands nationwide.

Now, don't get me wrong-while newsstand distribution represents a major leap for Comico, I don't mean to slight the direct market or its contribution to this industry. In the late '60s and early '70s, the rise of the comic book specialty store helped to strengthen and, some would even claim, save our entire business. Furthermore, by catering to the specialty collector, the direct sales shops made possible the successful formation of independent comic companies, like Comico. We all owe a great deal to the direct market. Some of us owe even more. I personally gained entry into the business of comics way back in 1978 when I ioined the staff of The Comicshop, in Vancouver, Canada, and then, some years later, got my first crack at professional writing and editing, on Comics & Comix's Telegraph Wire, in Berkeley, California. So, you can see where my loyalties lie. And frankly, there is no better place to go than the comic book specialty store for the tremendous variety of comic-related products available as well as thorough and knowledgeable salespeople.

Nonetheless, unlike the neighborhood newsstand, the direct sales market has not yet been able to reach into all the nooks and crannies of Canada and the U.S. And if this industry is to not only survive, but continue to truly grow, we cannot forget the casual reader who may not have ready access to a comic book shop. Nor can we forget the kids-and parents of kids-who may be more likely to pick up a couple of comics on impulse at the local drug store, rather than seek out a shop whose specialty is comic books-if, Indeed, they know that such a thing even exists! In general, the more comic book readers there are, the healthier our industry will be. And it's those same readers who, one day, may become staunch collectors and find their specialized needs better serviced by the direct market. After all, didn't we start out that way?

Speaking of which, the very first letter about our expanded distribution was written, not by a neophyte reader, but by Greg Myers, longtime columnist for the Comics Buyer's Guide, the industry's weekly newspaper. It follows here, because I wanted to share it with all our read-

Diana and staff-

You have to understand some-

I've been buying comic books from two or three local drug stores/ pharmacies for more than 25 years.

I used to ride my bicycle to them every Monday after school, and scan the wire spinner for all of the latest DC's. Much later, in high school, I added Marvels to my buying list, and drove to the stores in my first car.

Today, despite direct sales specialty shops, mail order, and all the rest, I still buy the majority of my comic books from the same old haunts, pulling into their parking lots in my new Celica Supra. Along with the weekly TV Guide and People, I dutifully grab up all of the comics I need, and pay for them at the same counter I did so many years ago.

All of this is a roundabout history lesson to partially explain the grin that came over my face this past Monday. There, among the DC's, Marvels, and Archies, were the first newsstand-distributed Comico titles! Before Eclipse, before First. before Renegade and the rest, Comico's line-up is in "my" drug stores! I love it! Congratulations.

Please understand I still obtained the various independent titles anyway, on visits to Toledo, Dayton, or Columbus comic shops, or conventions. But now, Comico has come to mel

I hope it all works out for you.

Sincere best wishes-Greg W. Myers Elida, OH

Thank you, Greg, for your support and well wishes.

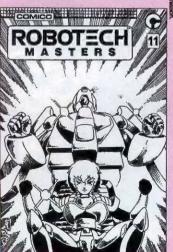

And to those who, unlike Greg, may not have even been aware of Comico's existence, to those who may be reading our comic books for the very first time: Welcome!

This October, Comico The Comic Company will introduce its new subsidiary:

INNY QUEST TM and © 1986 Hanna-Barbera Productions, Inc.

Brought to you by William Messner-Loebs, Mitch Schauer, and John Nyberg, in JONNY OUEST #5. Cover art by Dave Stevens. Don't miss its numerous SF and horror tales for Warren, and was the art director of Marvel's black-and-white line for two years.

AL WILLIAMSON

Over three decades before inking this issue's cover, Al Williamson joined the legendary EC Comics and contributed to such classic titles as WEIRD SCIENCE. WEIRD FANTASY, and TALES FROM THE CRYPT. He has spent the succeeding 34 years drawing westerns for Marvel and Gold Key, FLASH GORDON for King Features, newspaper strips such as RIP KIRBY, SECRET AGENT X-9, and STAR WARS, and other books, strips, and comics too numerous to list. Some of his most recent work includes Marvel's adaptations of Blade Runner and The Empire Strikes Back, "Cliff Hanger" in SOMERSET HOLMES, and inks in SUPERMAN. INCREDI-BLE HULK, DC PRE-SENTS, DROIDS, and Marvel's new STAR BRAND.

BRET BLEVINS

Bret Blevins' first comicsoriented art appeared in fanzines such as the RBCC, and from there he moved quickly on to Marvel, drawing individual issues of DR. STRANGE, SPIDER-MAN, and the entire SWORD OF SOLOMON KANE miniseries, not to mention a string of Marvel movie adaptations including DARK CRYSTAL, KRULL, and THE LAST STARFIGHTER.

Currently, in addition to inking next month's back cover, Bret is illustrating THE BOZZ CHRONICLES and is working on an Inhumans graphic novel to be inked by Al Williamson, with whom he shares a studio.

STEVE LEIALOHA

One of the industry's most distinctive stylists as both a penciller and an inker. Steve Leialoha has pencilled and inked such Marvel titles as COYOTE. SPIDER-WOMAN. MUTANTS, DR. STRANGE, and an X-MEN Annual. Some of his multitudinous inking credits include HOW-ARD THE DUCK, STAR WARS. WARLOCK, SEC-RET WARS II, Marvel's new FIRESTAR. and John Buscema's section of FAN-TASTIC FOUR #296 (the 25th anniversary issue). Stories in AMAZING HIGH ADVENTURE, VORTEX. STAR*REACH, and QUACK can be counted among his shorter original pieces.

Presently, Steve is working on "stories that involve Hawaiian myths and legends."

SAM KIETH

Sam Kieth quickly established himself in the professional comics community when he started inking Matt Wagner's pencils in MAGE #6. Being no stranger to Comico, however, Sam had pencilled and inked an original story in COMICO PRIMER #5. Between the two and since then, Sam drew a back-up story in JOURNEY #20, inked Jeff Dee in ROBOTECH THE NEW GENERATION #5 and Reggie Byers in THE MACROSS SAGA #8, did finished pencils over Neil Vokes' layouts in MASTERS #11, pencilled the cover for NEW GENERATION #7, and illustrated two horror tales in DEATH RATTLE and TALES OF TERROR. Most recently, Sam finished a two-pager for ANYTHING GOES, and is working on a project for Fantagraphics.

KEN FEDUNIEWICZ

After earning a B.F.A. in illustration at the Pratt Institute and attending the inaugural class at the Kubert School, Ken worked for Steranko's MEDIASCENE/PREVUE (as a staff writer), Warner Books (providing art for a series of educational reading kits incorporating DC characters), and Marvel (doing production, coloring, and lettering on newspaper strips and overseas material).

His big break as a colorist came when he colored the paperback version of Marvel's Return of the Jedi adaptation by Al Williamson. Ken is currently the regular colorist on CAPT. AMERICA, WEST COAST AVENGERS, and THE MARVEL SAGA.

KEITH WILSON

Keith Wilson entered the publishing arena as the art director of the COMICS INFORMER, after which he was one of the founding members of Texas Comics, publishers of the JUSTICE MACHINE ANNUAL.

His reputation as an inker has increased since inking three issues of BADGER as well as Blaze Barlow in FIRST ADVENTURES, not to mention numerous issues of ROBOTECH MASTERS and issue #14 of THE MACROSS SAGA.

In addition to developing a newspaper strip with Bill Hinds (whom he occasionally assists on Tank McNamara), you can look for pinups by Keith in future issues of JONNY QUEST.
